These teachings were instilled in him but he didn't quite believe in it all... in fact, he would have lengthy discussions and later arguments with his local priests about various tenants of the belief system of the latter-day saints. When he awakened at religious gay conversion, he saw what he thought was the full unbridled majesty of the heavens and the true face of the divine in the aether... and this journey... plus his growing resentment with his family and faith caused him to leave home and go on a journey... joining up with various different churches... religious groups... missions and cults across the united states absorbing all their knowledge and ideas and beliefs while he tried to reconcile these beliefs and the ones he was born with to what he saw on that fateful day he traveled the aether in his mind. This has lead him to come to an understanding that God isn't wholly a spiritual being... they are an entity just like any other and should one try hard enough they can communicate with him and work wonders and miracles (magic) in his name... this god might not be the exact god of the Judeo-Christian belief structure but they are real and deserve worship and praise... and maybe if he's lucky enough... he can achieve divinity himself through following them.
